Dear Mr. Shields:

The Silver Wave may be able to land her mail and I may have full instructions from you about the affairs of Stanley and his brother Henry. However in case there is nothing I wish you would send me the necessary directions to apply to this case.

Henry has been constantly disregarding instructions, and is selling meat which we are unable to find where he secures it, as the head is invariably missing. I have exhausted my ability trying to get him to settle with his brother Stanley to no avail; and while promising to go at once and settle he has avoided it not less than 10 times and I am tired.

To make matters worse he repeatedly tried to force his way into homes where there were young girls and was repulsed until at last he succeeded in persuading Avorluk to let him come in to their daughter and in that way he succeeded in getting a wife for we made them marry legally. Since that he is more defiant and a very bad example in the village. I have taken his deer from him and ordered them to be transferred to the mission herd and have secured a man to look after them. I should like to have some instructions from you as to the disposition of this matter. My opinion is that nothing short of a few months at real labor will teach this fellow anything. Could it be managed?

We will fill the cold-storage in about 10 days now.

We are looking for full particulars of the Jan. meet at Igloo.

All other things seem to have quieted down nad we are sleeping with one eye shut now again but are keeping on the alert.

Sincerely,

Chas. Replogle COPY
